

My Thoughts on GUI and Command Line

It's Saturday afternoon, and I'm chilling out on the couch watching YouTube videos. My wife walks in the room and asks, "Hey, I'm going to Bed Bath and Beyond. Do you want to go?" I think to myself, that's an easy answer, and I reply, "No babe, I have important things to do!" I then go back to watching stupid cat videos, and within minutes I'm taking a nap.

A week later, it's Saturday afternoon, and I'm dozing off on the couch watching stupid cat videos. I hear my wife call, "hey sexy, looks like you involved in some important things, so I am on my way to REI." I bolt off the couch and just as fast say, "I'm finished up with my important stuff. Let me grab my hat, and I will go with you, baby doll!"

Guey and CLI are just like Bed Bath and Beyond and REI. CLI will not get me off the couch on a Saturday afternoon GUI will. I'm a truck driver because I was interested in a lot of other things besides learning CLI. I believe if I were born a few years later, I would have pursued a career in computers. Now that I am almost 50, I am ready to use my brain and learn CLI, so I can work on the couch.

I spent a little time trying to work with UNIX on my Mac, and I didn't do much. Most of the commands I learned back in the '80s and early '90s don't work. I got a list of commands off the internet, and they didn't work either. Managing files is easier for me using GUI. Looking at icons is also a faster way to recognize what I am looking for. I am going to keep working on this and will get better with practice.

I took the kahoot quiz and didn't farewell. I don't ever play video games, and It was a little scary for me. I got excited in the wrong way and couldn't answer the questions. I tried to retake the quiz, but it wouldn't let me.
